I began visiting with Betty in January of 2005. I saw her every Thursday except for vacations or illness. I always enjoyed Betty and polished her nails many times--whether she was up or in bed. She would tell me about current events in her family--a wedding, a holiday dinner, illness, or the birth of another grandchild. She never complained about anything, but did admit to her pain the last few weeks before her last surgery. She loved her family more than anything. I am happy that she is now at rest with no more pain, with legs to run and a healthy body to enjoy paradise forever with Jesus. I am a better person to have known her and loved her.##imported-begin##Cathy Tejchma##imported-end##
